

Cincinnati's Foodshed: An Art Atlas Past, Present, and Future

The Cincinnati and Ohio Valley Region has a rich food and farming history and a promising future. The Greater Cincinnati Regional Food Policy Council of Green Umbrella is hosting this collaborative project. We are gathering historical images, commissioning original artwork, and creating infographics and maps that celebrate our food system's evolution and related innovations. The collection is being used to curate publications and create unique community-based spaces for conversation and action.

Topics covered range from Johnny Appleseed, the inventions of the disassembly line and removable bee frames, the founding of Kroger and P&G, North America's wine making renaissance, to our contemporary global and local food system components. We explore our food forest installations, craft brewing and coffee roasting, to our diverse food retail environments, food rescue, composting, and food asset mapping projects. We also dream of what the future could be.

Join us in deepening our understanding of the past and present and in imagining a more sustainable, healthy, and equitable future. Please consider sponsoring our project. We graciously accept any level of financial support.

Sincerely,

Alan Wight
